The potato began its rise to prominence over 450 years ago. It was one of the treasures found by Spanish explorers among the Inca Indians. Sir Frances Drake is said to have introduced the potato to Europe.

It is now prominent in the daily diet of millions and the world potato crop is second only to the heat crop.

The French call the potato the "pomme-de-terre" apple of the earth, and though it may be hard to believe an apple and a potato have the same number of calories.

The potato contains a myriad of sound nutritional values and is an excellent source of complete carbohydrates. It is full of B, C, K Vitamins, plus many minerals.

The potato, something good that's good for you!
